

MARYLAND CENTER FOR HISTORY AND CULTURE

Guide to Civil War Records

Maryland played a key role in the Civil War. Several major battles were fought in Maryland, and the state's location made it important both politically and militarily. As a border state between the North and the South, Maryland's loyalties were divided during the Civil War. Culturally, Maryland probably shared more with the South, but increasingly, economic concerns were strengthening Maryland's connections to the industrial North. When the Deep South seceded, Maryland did not initially follow and instead heralded the union. Popular sentiment seemed opposed to the idea of secession until Abraham Lincoln called for troops to put down the rebellious states. Riots broke out between soldiers from the North and the people of Baltimore in 1861. At least 10 soldiers and as many civilians were killed in what some called the "Massacre at Baltimore". Whether Maryland would have seceded after this if left to their own is still debated by historians. However, circumstances precluded such action. President Lincoln declared martial law, rescinded the right of habeas corpus, and Union troops entered Maryland.

A number of battles were fought in Maryland, including the Battle of Antietam/Sharpsburg, where more than 25,000 men were wounded in one bloody day of fighting. Many of the books in the Library's collection provide detailed information about the war in Maryland as well as lists of those who fought. The Maryland Center for History and Culture includes displays on the Civil War, as does the Baltimore Civil War Museum at President Street Station.

It is estimated that up to 60,000 Marylanders fought for the Union during the Civil War. Maryland raised 20 infantry and four cavalry regiments for Union service, along with six artillery batteries. There were no official Maryland troops in the Confederacy, but sympathetic Marylanders organized infantry, cavalry, and artillery units. Others joined military outfits from other states. As many as 25,000 Marylanders fought for the South in the war. On the whole, those officers who fought for the Confederacy tended to represent the landed gentry of Maryland, while Union officers were more likely to be farmers or artisans. Those Marylanders fighting for the Confederacy suffered greater combat losses than those who sided with the North.

A variety of resources can help researchers chronicle a soldier's experience during the Civil War or gain insight into other aspects of the conflict. Those interested in tracing a Civil War ancestor will be most interested in service and pension records. The National Archives has complete rosters of all soldiers – Union and Confederate – with a CMSR. The National Archives also has pension records that can be helpful in confirming military service. The MCHC Library's Collection includes both published and manuscript sources, and a number of the most popular Civil War sources are listed below. Please be aware that this is not a complete list. Both published and manuscript sources are included in our on-line catalog, and patrons are encouraged to experiment with general and specific searches. Several guides exist to further aid researchers in finding relevant material. Finding aids are available on the MCHC website, and similar information can be found in two published books (Ref. MZ6621.M393 and Ref. MZ6621.M3914). More detailed finding aids for manuscript sources are also available in the Main Reading Room.
